collects the proceedings of the 11th International Workshop on Multimedia Information Systems, MIS 2005, which was held during September 19-21, 2005 in the beautiful town of Sorrento, Italy. The MIS series of workshops started in 1995 with the aim of fostering - terdisciplinary discussions and research in all aspects of multimedia information systems, in all their diversity. Since then, in	MIS workshops, issues ranging from fundamental multimedia information management research to advanced applications in multimedia systems related fields have been discussed, new systems have been reported, and the lessons learned have provided new insights into this dynamic and exciting area of computer science and engineering. As the program chairs of the	MIS 2005 workshop, we note that while designing an effective multimedia system, two complementary issues have to be taken into account: (a) the need to use appropriate technologies in acquiring, processing, and delivering multimedia data which manifest themselves under very different shapes; and (b) the need for modeling, indexing, querying, retrieving, mining, and visualizing data under different system and device capabilities, for different users. Therefore, besides the development of more traditional content management technologies, there are emerging needs to gather media from se- ing devices in the environmental context, for informedproce ssingofmediab ased on the current task and resources, and for making the results available to the user in the most suitable form based on the capabilities and preferences of the user. philosophers. The English medieval village community offers a historical and philosophical lens on the concept of custom which challenges accepted notions of what law is. The book traces the study of the medieval village community from early historical works in the nineteenth century through to current research. It demonstrates that some law-making	can and has been 'bottom-up' in English law, with community-led decisionmaking having a particularly important role in the early common law. The detailed consideration of law in the English village community reveals alternative ways of making and conceiving of law which are not dependent on state authority, particularly in relation to customary and communal property	rights. Acknowledging this poses challenges for legal theory: the legal positivism that dominates Western legal philosophy tends to reject custom as a source of law. However, this book argues that medieval customary law ought to be considered 'law' if we are ever going to fully understand law - both then and now. The book will be a valuable resource for researchers and academics working in the

Lev Vygotsky has acquired the status of one of the grand masters in psychology. Following the English translation and publication of his Collected Works there has been a new wave of interest in Vygotsky, accompanied by a burgeoning of secondary literature.

Ronald Miller argues that Vygotsky is increasingly being 'read' and understood through secondary sources and that scholars have claimed Vygotsky as the foundational figure for their own theories, eliminating his most distinctive contributions and distorting his theories. Miller peels away the accumulated layers of commentary to provide a clearer understanding of how Vygotsky built and developed his arguments. In an in-depth analysis of the last three chapters of Vygotsky's book Thinking and Speech, Miller provides a critical interpretation of the core theoretical concepts that constitute Vygotsky's cultural-historical theory, including the development of concepts, mediation, the zone of

Based on experiences with micro-leasing schemes in many different parts of the world, this book assists managers of NGOs and microfinance institutions in developing countries who are contemplating starting a leasing scheme. It explains what leasing is, how to design and market a lease product, and how to deal with regulatory and fiscal issues.

Legal and fiscal practices from different countries are described to illustrate general notions on the regulatory aspects of leasing.
