William J. Bernstein promises to lay out an investment strategy that any seven year old could understand and will take just 15 minutes of work per year. He also promises it will beat 90% of finance professionals in the long run, but still make you a millionaire over time. Bernstein is addressing young Americans just embarking on their working careers. Bernstein advocates saving 15% of one's salary starting no later than age 25 into tax-sheltered savings plans (IRA or 401(k) in the U.S., RRSPs or Registered Pension Plans in Canada), and divvying up the money into just three mutual funds: a U.S. total stock market index fund, an international stock market index fund and a U.S. total bond market index fund. For millennials, saving 15% of salary is the financial equivalent of dying, which is why Bernstein titles his document 'If you can.'

Throughout high school, I vividly remember my teachers hammering home the facts that the first British settlement in America was at Jamestown in 1607, the mitochondria is the powerhouse of the cell, and the value of Pi is 3.14. But do any of these facts carry over and have contemporary value in the real world? For most of us, the answer is a resounding no-especially when compared to the tangible value of learning how to grow our hard-earned savings through sound investment strategies.Perhaps, then, it is of little surprise that most of the stressors and anxieties in our lives are centered on finances, yet my generation (the millennials) are woefully unprepared to navigate today's financial landscape. This book will seek to remedy the issue by offering a common sense approach to investing, retirement, and budgeting, so that our generation can live a life of financial freedom and retire at will. This book will give you the foundation needed to be a Millennial on FIRE! About the Author: Mike Berdela is a 34-year-old fitness professional and real estate investor who lives in Charleston, South Carolina. Prior to these careers, he was a Captain in the US Army in the field artillery and civil affairs branches. Millennials are opting to rent their housing in record numbers. We're told their student loans lock them out of the market; but, is there a deeper preference for mobility freedom and financial freedom? Whatever the motive, home ownership rates are dropping from historic highs. Do Millennials know something we don't? The FIRE (Financial Independent Retire Early) movement has risen among the Millennial generation who prefer living off passive income from investments and choosing if, when, and how they prefer to "work." Is this group just lazy and do they make a big mistake in forgoing home ownership in preference for a balanced portfolios of passive income generating ETFs? Or, has the role of the house changed? Might there be something to be learned from Millennials who view the house, not as a means to wealth, but rather something that consumes it. What's going on here? Previous generations viewed the house as our best investment; yet now, it seems our houses are a constraining anchor. Contrary to what some Baby Booming "financial advisers" on radio may say, some Millennials view owning or paying-off the house to be one of the worst things you can do with your money. Why? Houses lock-up money, are expensive, and appreciate at very low rates. FIREy Millennials avoid having their house as their only investment and prefer a well-diversified portfolio and lifestyle freedom to go along with it. Is there something previous generations can learn here? If people, at the median, excluding home equity have less than $10K saved outside, might selling the house and investing the proceeds in higher returning, income producing assets, be a path to earlier retirement and greater lifestyle freedom. Can we separate ourselves from love of houses and Rent Like a Millennial: Retire Early. Miss Independent Independently Published
